

IMPERFECT MATCH

A one-minute monologue

By JANE CAFARELLA

Drama

LUCY, 30s-40s, tells her friend Julie she's finally met the man of her dreams.

I've met someone!

At a party. A few months ago.

You know when you have a real connection? Like old friends who can pick up the conversation where they left off after years of not seeing each other. Unreal!

Of course, he's good looking.

Well, kinda.

That's not really a priority.

Okay he's as bald as a baboon's butt. But who cares? He's intelligent, caring, funny...STRAIGHT! And he runs his own business.

The Mary Poppins of men – practically perfect in every way!

Except for one thing.

He's got two kids with this lesbian couple, and he's INVOLVED. Very involved.

He doesn't want any more kids.

I want kids of my own. Before it's too late. I don't want a part-time lover who has to go to his other family for Christmases and birthdays.

I know it's selfish, but I want him all to myself.

What am I going to do?
